

Late Filing

Dear FCC Commissioners & Staff:

Telco's need to be reminded of the factt hat they have traditionally been unable to provide computer services. If they could I submit that we woul dhave had an 'Internet' of sorts over the last 25 years.

Telco's in their unbridled enthusiasm have attempted to provide directly or indirectly higher-end services such as hosting. These are services that they are simply not prepared to upkeep, they never have and they never will.

If you were able to apporach an Telco in a moment of lucidity and clearness they would be the first to admit that their business strengths are not in any sort of equipment that is of an overly complex nature such as a computer.

We commonly think that they can do anything because they are the phone company but this isn't true.

I think much good can come of this position. I have had to dal with the problems and it hasen't been easy to say the least.

Sincerely,

Ken Kaprielian
